The Hammer Museum Presents Mandala of Compassion
September 27 – October 12, 2014

Los Angeles—The Hammer Museum is pleased to welcome the return of four highly respected Tibetan Buddhist monks—Venerable Gelong Kalsang Rinpoche, Venerable Lama Nawang Thogmed, Lama Nawang Samten Lhundrup, and Lama Dorji Sherpa—to create an elaborate sand mandala in the Lobby Gallery. This two-week program, presented in partnership with Ari Bhöd, the American Foundation for Tibetan Cultural Preservation, features the construction of a sacred sand painting embodying compassion. Millions of grains of colored sand will be sprinkled carefully on a flat surface over the course of two weeks, following precise and ancient instructions passed down over thousands of years.

This is the third time the Hammer has collaborated with Ari Bhöd to bring traditionally trained Lamas to the museum. In the first presentation, The Mandala Project in 2010, the Lamas broke attendance records for the Lobby Gallery when they created a mandala representing Guru Padmasambhava, the master who brought Buddhism to Tibet. The Lamas returned in 2012 to perform a healing ceremony in the Billy Wilder Theater. The mandala that the Lamas will make this fall represents Chenrezig, the embodiment of the compassion of all Buddhas combined. The creation of this mandala is intended to help the viewer generate boundless compassion for all beings. Visitors to the Hammer can watch the Lamas create the Mandala and are invited to join the Lamas in pujas at the beginning and end of each day. The pujas include prayer and meditation intended to help bring to mind the qualities of the Buddha of Compassion. After spending two weeks creating the mandala with intense concentration, the final grains of sand are placed and then the entire sand painting is swept up in a final display of impermanence. The Lamas and the visitors bring the collected sand to the ocean and offer it as a blessing as part of the dissolution ceremony.

The mandala is a profound, universal symbol that translates literally to “center and its surroundings” and is a physical representation of our interdependence with the world around us. Mandalas are found in many forms, but always include a circle, a central point, and some form of symmetry. They can be created in sand, on paper or cloth, or built as 3-dimensional models or buildings. The vivid painted mandalas of Tibet are the most widely known.

Traditionally created as a tool for visualization and meditation, every single detail of a mandala—the design, the colors, and placement of symbols—is deliberate. The blueprints are considered sacred, with many layers of deep meaning and positive representation. Before beginning, traditional mandala artists generate the intention to benefit others and the motivation of compassion, which is believed to infuse the art or structure with unique spiritual and sacred qualities.

The public is invited to watch the Lamas create the mandala during the museum hours.

Please note: While the mandala will be on view during museum hours, the Lamas will not be present during their lunch, as well as from 7-8PM on Tuesdays-Fridays.

WEEKDAY VISITS:
We encourage those interested in spending more time with the mandala to visit during the week when the museum is quieter. Tuesday through Friday, visitors will be welcomed into the space as capacity allows. Please be advised that at times visitors may be asked to wait in line if the gallery is already at capacity.

WEEKEND VISITS:
Because of the fragility of the sand mandala and in order to accommodate expected high visitor turnout on the weekends, a same-day timed ticketing procedure will be in place on Saturdays and Sundays. Please visit hammer.ucla.edu for more information.
