Hammer Museum Presents Group Exhibition Lifes
On view February 13 – May 8, 2022

Olivia Mole, 2021.

(Los Angeles, CA)— The Hammer Museum at UCLA presents Lifes, an exhibition that explores the possibilities and pitfalls of interdisciplinary artmaking. Initiated by four commissioned texts and including contributions from nearly 50 individuals from various creative fields, the exhibition considers the legacy of the so-called total work of art. Organized by Aram Moshayedi, Robert Soros Curator, with Nicholas Barlow, curatorial assistant, Lifes will be on view February 13 – May 8, 2022.

“Lifes is an expression of the ways in which conversations between artists can produce new art forms. I’m proud that the Hammer Museum is a place for exhibitions that challenge how we see and think about art, how art is made and distributed and for whom,” said Hammer Museum director Ann Philbin. “Lifes will be a living, breathing entity that changes over the span of the exhibition, and I believe the mystery of what results will have a special resonance in our current pandemic life, where isolation and uncertainty abound.”

The exhibition was initiated by textual contributions from four writers—philosopher and author Fahim Amir, writer and director Asher Hartman, poet and visual artist Rindon Johnson, and author and essayist Adania Shibli. The invitations came with no expectation as to how their writing would manifest itself within the galleries of the museum, centering instead on the precarious authority words have over meaning, the shortcomings of interdisciplinarity, and the question of audience as inseparable from the public life of exhibitions. “It seemed fitting to start with writing—to invert the relationship between text and context—because of its frequent consignment as a form of response to art,” said Aram Moshayedi. “It was a relatively open-ended solicitation meant to harness the writers’ divergent interests, because the desired goal was disparity rather than continuity and cohesion.”

As the process continued, individual writers began to suggest possible collaborators, or intermediaries, through which a conversation around the function of their respective contributions could unfold. For example, Johnson proposed meeting with artist Kite, which then led to a collaboration with L. Frank, a Tongva-Ajachmem artist, writer, tribal scholar, and Indigenous language activist. Amir recommended a conversation with artist and dramaturg Elke Auer, which led to their proposal of a tower—modeled on Vladimir Tatlin’s Monument to the Third International (1920)—that would be a monument for the future liberation of animals and humans.

Over time, more interlopers and interlocutors began to emerge and give shape to Lifes: choreographer Bob Kil and artist Nina Beier’s animating of Hartman’s script titled “Animal Regret: Five Dances”; a fragrance concocted by Dora Budor; Charles Gaines’s Falling Rock (2000); a fantastical tree carved from polyurethane foam by Piero Gilardi; a heat-sensitive bench conceived by Cooper Jacoby; Jules Gimbrone and Micah Silver’s research into Schlieren imaging; Morag Keil’s pneumatic tube system processing biological matter; and others.

The individual contributions to Lifes are not necessarily conceived as discrete units but rather parts of a larger whole. Many projects will continue to cohere after the exhibition’s opening and their meanings in relation to others will change as it unfolds. Lifes will depend upon a series of live performances in the galleries over the course of the exhibition that provide new frameworks through which to view and consider other contributions.
